

the little things

When was it that we stopped playing?

A photograph of three performers in a physical theatre scene. On the left, a man in a bright orange jacket and dark pants is in a dynamic pose, leaning forward with his arms out. In the center, a woman in a red jacket and grey pants is laughing or shouting with her mouth open, her arms raised. Behind her, another man in a light blue shirt is partially visible, also in a dynamic pose. The background is dark and smoky, with a vertical light source on the left.

The Little Things started life as a show for children, but rapidly transformed into a sassy and fast-moving performance for their parents, that is seen by children and adults on two very different levels.

Born from a view of the world as seen at knee-height, by children, and the world they discover, LPC transforms from the innocence of a hungry caterpillar into a majestic butterfly, exploring and dazzling the world. Using puppetry and dance, physical theatre and music, it blends the comic directness and sincere naivety of childhood with the often absurd struggle of parents to be great role-models whilst also stretching to keep the very grown-up pleasures and releases of adult life.

This is a riotous, fresh and inspiring piece of physical theatre for anyone who is a child, has ever been a child or has children in their lives.

In each city or area, we can give a group of young people the opportunity to be part of this theatrical experience. Contributing their ideas and voices, then rehearsing with the company, and appearing – as a surprise to the audience – onstage as part of the finale of the show.

audience comments

"It is not easy to find inclusive shows for young and old, and with this show the whole family enjoyed it, as each of us has found a way to connect. We are grateful for experiences like this specially in the times we are living - leaving the theatre with needles of laughter and eyes damp with emotion is priceless. Congratulations!"

"Giving children a voice is necessary. And the freshness of the show is perfect."

"It is a beautiful and fun work that invites us to reflect on our role as adults that educate but also as people with needs and desires beyond our role as mothers and fathers. It also contemplates a point of view that is often not taken into account, that of the children we accompany and their vision of the adult world. A much needed reflection, thank you for capturing it so well and especially with wonderful humor, so necessary".

"Congratulations for the work. I loved it! And with the reactions of the children during the show, it became clear that children understand everything, even more than adults. "
